

NAVEX ESG Responsible Supply Chain Management

Manage the risk third parties bring to your responsibility commitments and ethics.

Organisations are getting smart and ambitiously managing governance, risk, ethics, and compliance within their four walls. Consumers, investors, and regulators are aligning with the need for companies to be ethical, resilient, and responsible to provide economic and environmental sustainability. These same groups do not forgive well run organisations if their supply chain does not uphold the same values. The faults of your third parties can quickly become your faults, destroying relationships, value, and your brand.

Addressing the environmental resiliency risk in your supply chain helps preserve and create value and resiliency. Your relationship with your suppliers requires you to manage Greenhouse Gas Emissions (GHG) and Scope 3 data, factory conditions, pay equity, water usage, diversity, and other metrics important and relevant to your industry. With your suppliers' conduct now relevant to you and how your organisation and operations are perceived, your supplier data must be as accurate as your internal data. Your management, investors, and the general public will rest assured knowing you are managing your third-party sustainability information with the same diligence and accuracy as your internal metrics.
